The Train and the Toothbrush
A story about what we share—and what we don't.

Dawny was building.
Page's train travelled round the rug.

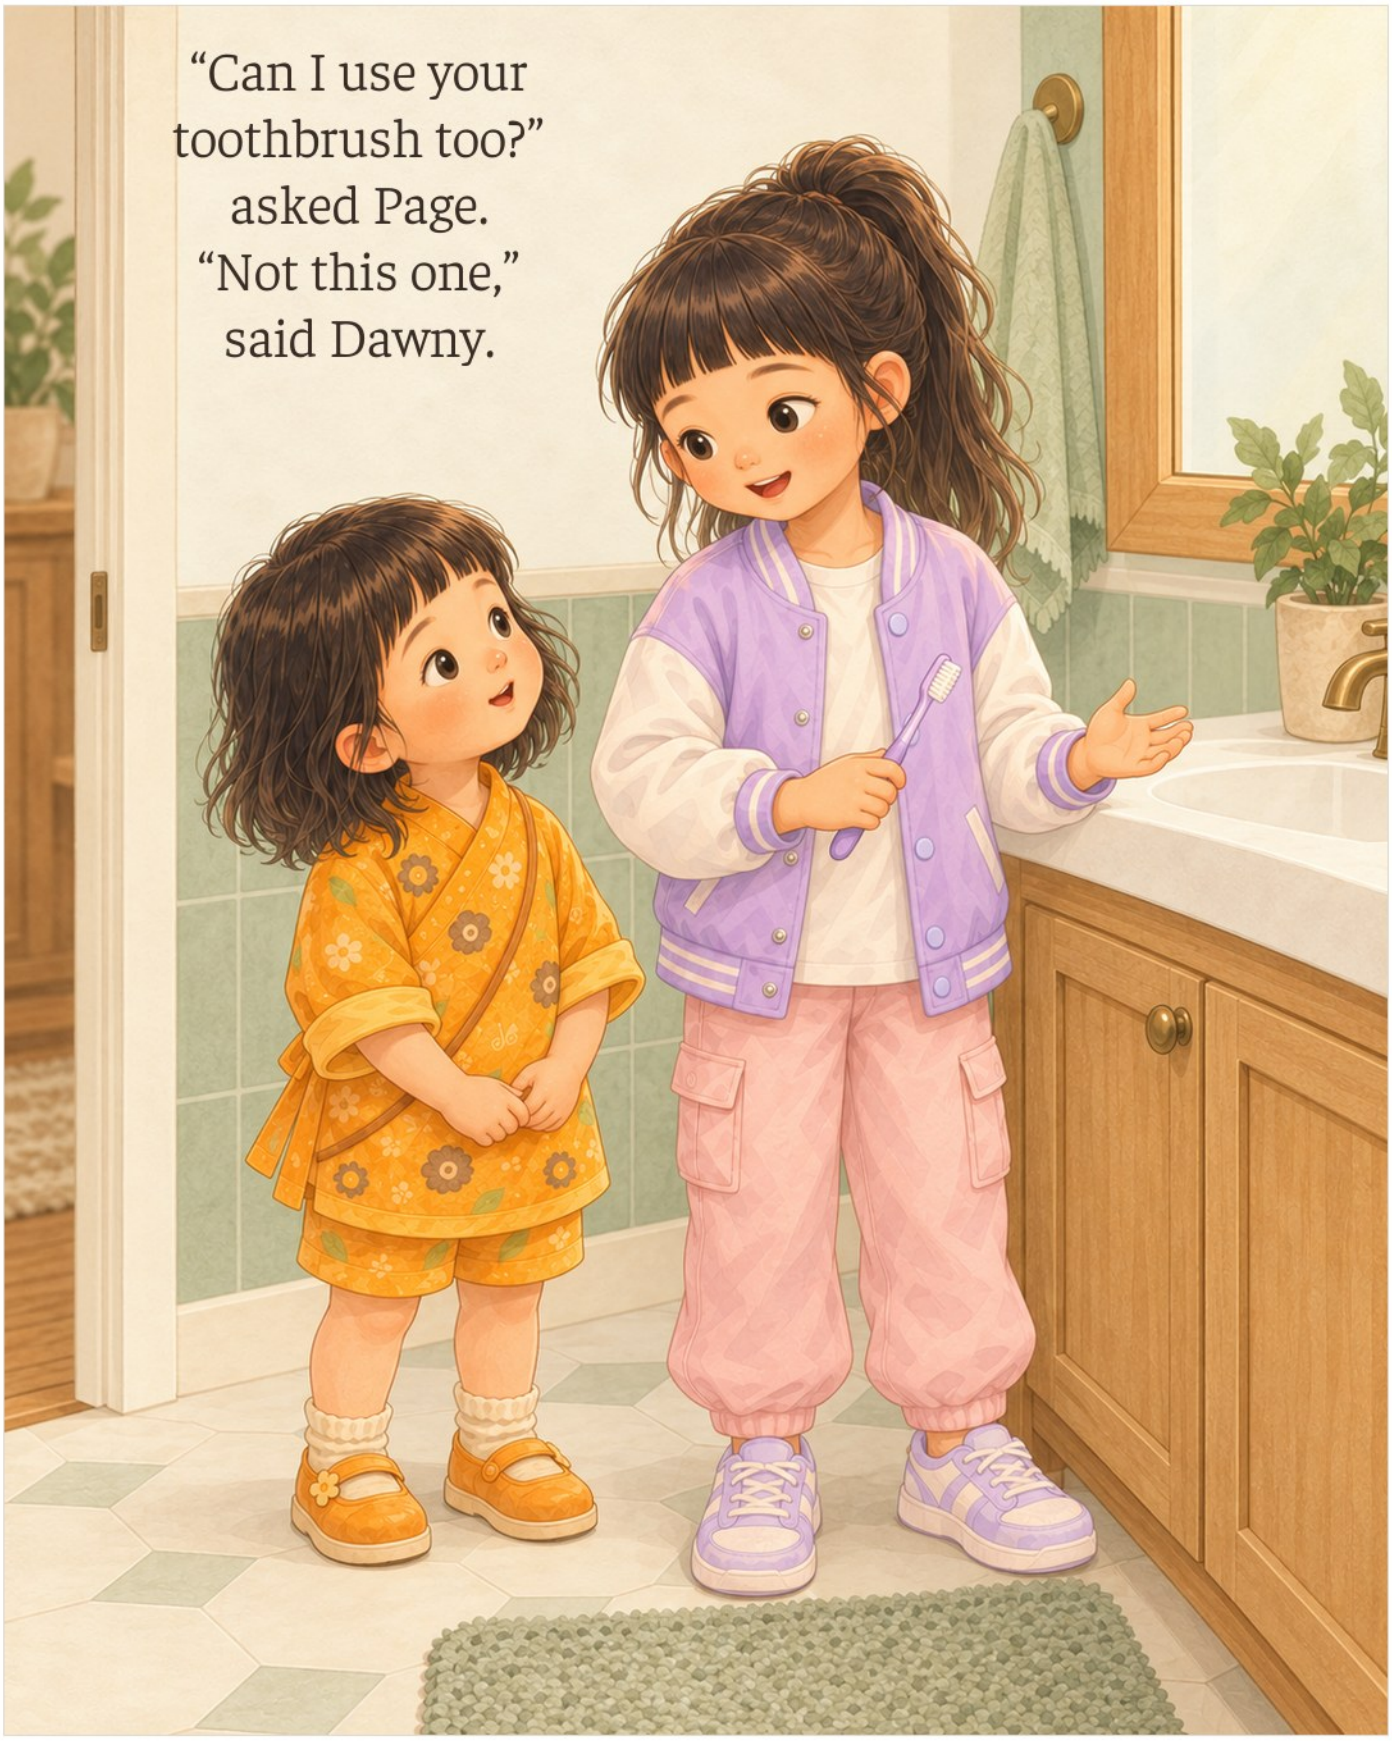

“Can I build with you?” asked Page.
“After this bit—then yes,” said Dawny.

Page offered the train. Dawny offered some blocks. Together, they built a station.

“Can I use your toothbrush too?”
asked Page.
“Not this one,”
said Dawny.

“Little germs can travel on toothbrushes.
We each use our own.”

Mum brought Page her own brush.
Then the sisters brushed side by side.

They shared a game.
Their toothbrushes stayed their own.

A little to talk about

After the story, you could ask together:

What might we enjoy sharing?

What stays our own?

Blocks or a train? Ask first.

A toothbrush? We each use our own.

A favourite toy? “Not right now” is okay.
